

CURRICULUM 2018

The curriculum offered by the School of Journalism and Media Studies is based on the assumption that university-level education should produce media practitioners and scholars who are intellectually astute – both in the study and the production of media. Thus, students are expected to become familiar with debates about media – both within the realm of scholarship and as it operates amongst media practitioners. They are, furthermore, expected to explore the implications of these debates through their own practice of media production. In this way the School aims to produce self-reflexive, critical and analytical graduates whose practice is probing, imaginative, civic minded and outspoken.

To see detailed information on the courses in each year please turn to the relevant pages of the handbook.

In the FIRST YEAR, students are introduced to the theory and practice of journalism. They learn a range of journalism skills, including journalism for web-based platforms. They are also introduced to core concepts in media and New Media studies.

In the SECOND YEAR students learn about the histories of South African media to gain a broad understanding of the current media landscape. They then deepen this understanding by scrutinising the institutions and systems that define South African media production, and study the media texts that are generated in this environment. They also learn to conceptualise, research and produce publications, both for print and broadcast purposes.

In THIRD YEAR, students embark on specialised media production courses, choosing between communication design, photojournalism, radio journalism, television journalism, or writing and editing. These elective modules run throughout the year. In order to establish a theoretical foundation for these electives, students also complete a Theory of Practice course in Term One. In the remainder of the year, they take part in three media studies courses that are designed to contextualise the work that they do as media practitioners. This includes a module in conflict-sensitive journalism (second term); law and ethics for journalists (third term); and media and its audiences in a digital age (fourth term).

If students go on to FOURTH YEAR and graduate with a BJourn, they can either continue with their specialisation, or decide to diversify by taking courses in writing, new media or photojournalism. The focus is on the role of media in social change.

The HONOURS programme establishes a foundational ability in the study of media (for some students, it operates as a preparation for an academic career in such study). Specialist content areas are also offered.

The MASTERS programme develops deeper knowledge and builds independent research competencies and, as such, potentially prepares students for the autonomous research work that is central to a PhD. These programmes are therefore designed to operate as building blocks within a coherent postgraduate programme.

The PHD programme is for students who would like to go into a specific research area and do a media related thesis.

The one-year POSTGRADUATE DIPLOMA IN JOURNALISM AND MEDIA STUDIES is an option for students who have graduated with a non-journalism degree and would like to fast-track their career in the media sector. The programme includes skills and principles of reporting, the study of debates surrounding the nature and role of journalism in society and the application of media law and ethics. Students spend part of the year (and the course), as reporters at Grocott's Mail.

The POSTGRADUATE DIPLOMA IN MEDIA MANAGEMENT (PDMM) is designed to equip recent graduates and media professionals with the knowledge and skills they require to perform in a mid-level management position within a public, corporate or community media organisation. The course focuses on operational and theoretical aspects of media management.

SCHOLARSHIPS

Rhodes University and The School of Journalism and Media Studies do not normally offer scholarships to students before they commence their studies; thus, scholarships are not available for first year students. Thereafter, a variety of undergraduate and postgraduate scholarships/bursaries are available, based on certain criteria.

AT UNDERGRADUATE LEVEL, MOST AVAILABLE SCHOLARSHIPS ARE PERFORMANCE-BASED AND REQUIRE NO APPLICATION. These are usually bequests or donations by alumni of the school and other parties – awarded to strongly performing students. Certain media organisations also offer scholarships in particular areas of study from time to time; and students are informed if there are scholarships for which applications are required.

Certain JMS-SPECIFIC POST-GRADUATE SCHOLARSHIPS ARE AVAILABLE. Please enquire about availability and application with the course coordinator.

Rhodes University also offers MASTERS SCHOLARSHIPS to students who excel. These are for Masters and PhD students and are open to all Faculties and are therefore not reserved for Journalism students. Please consult the Postgraduate Financial Aid web page (<http://www.ru.ac.za/research/postgraduates/funding>) or email pgfinaid-admin@ru.ac.za for further details.

RHODES UNIVERSITY AND NFSAS (National Student Financial Aid Scheme of South Africa) also offer financial aid to students who need help meeting certain financial obligations. For more information on financial aid, please click on the following link: <http://www.ru.ac.za/studentfunding>

TUITION REBATES

REWARDS FOR EXCELLENCE

Tuition rebates are awarded to undergraduate achievers:

- » A rebate of 50% to students who obtain distinctions (75%+) in all their subjects
- » A rebate of 25% to students who obtain distinctions (75%+) in all but one of their subjects
- » A rebate of 12.5% to students who obtain distinctions (75%+) in all but two of their subjects.

Rebates are considered at the end of first, second and third years, (in the case of a four-year degree) for subjects considered appropriate to the student's degree and year of study (i.e. first-year courses in the first year of study and second-year courses in the second year of study).
